Nonlinear light propagation

Nicolas Pavloff∗1

1Laboratoire de Physique Théorique et Modèles Statistiques (LPTMS) – CNRS : UMR8626, Université Paris XI - Paris Sud – Bâtiment 100 Université Paris-Sud Centre Scientifique d’Orsay 15 rue Georges Clémenceau 91405 Orsay cedex, France

Abstract

Nonlinear light propagation has long been known to exhibit a rich variety of spectacular effects, such as frequency mixing processes, modulational instability, optical solitons... The lecture will review such effects, with an emphasis on modern aspects such as superfluid light, dispersive shock waves and also the possible formation of analogous black holes.